If You Directly Purchased Flexible Polyurethane Foam
Between January 1, 1999 – July 31, 2010,
You Could be Entitled to a Substantial Payment from a Proposed Settlement*

* In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litigation, Case No.10-md-2196

Settlement Fund: $275,500,000 (FFP, FXI, Future Foam, Hickory Springs, Mohawk and Woodbridge Settlements)

Period of Claim: January 1, 1999 to July 31, 2010

Filing Deadline: September 15, 2015

Summary: In this lawsuit, certain direct purchasers of Flexible Polyurethane Foam allege that Defendants conspired to fix, raise, stabilize, or maintain the prices and allocate territories or customers of Flexible Polyurethane Foam, in violation of antitrust laws. Plaintiffs allege that this conspiracy caused direct purchasers to pay more for Flexible Polyurethane Foam than they would have otherwise paid.

Eligibility: All persons or entities that purchased polyurethane foam (but excluding molded foam) directly from Defendants and/or their co-conspirators from January 1, 1999 to July 31, 2010 for purchase from or delivery into the United States. If you did not previously submit a Settlement claim form, you must file a claim form to receive payment from these Settlements. If you wish to amend your previous claims to update your Flexible Polyurethane Foam purchase amount, you may submit an amended claim form for these Settlements.

Products: As used herein, "Flexible Polyurethane Foam" includes "slabstock" flexible polyurethane foam (also known as "block" foam), fabricated or converted foam products made from "slabstock" flexible polyurethane foam, and carpet underlay (also known as "carpet cushion," "carpet pad" or "carpet padding") manufactured from polyurethane foam. The term Flexible Polyurethane Foam does not include "molded" foam (also known as "engineered" foam) or "rigid" foam (also known as "technical" foam). Flexible Polyurethane foam is widely used for cushioning and insulation in a wide variety of goods. These include but are not limited to: furniture, mattresses, packaging, flooring and motor vehicles.

Defendants: The companies Plaintiffs sued are called Defendants. All Defendants in this litigation have now settled. Defendants include the Vitafoam Defendants, the Domfoam Defendants, Leggett & Platt, Carpenter, FFP, FXI, Future Foam, Hickory Springs, Mohawk and Woodbridge. As used herein, the alleged "Co-conspirators" are the following entities that were included as Defendants in Plaintiffs' consolidated amended complaint, but have since been voluntarily dismissed from the litigation: Ohio Decorative Products, Inc.; Inoac International Co., Ltd.; Inoac USA Inc.; Inoac Corporation; Crest Foam Industries Inc.; Louis Carson; and David Carson.
